

Public International Law: Public International Law governs the relationships between sovereign states and international entities. It includes treaties, international agreements, conventions, and customary practices that regulate the behavior of nations. This branch of law deals with issues such as war, diplomacy, human rights, and global environmental standards.

Private International Law (Conflict of Laws): Private International Law deals with cases that involve private individuals or entities across national borders. It determines which legal system or jurisdiction's laws are applicable in a dispute involving foreign elements, such as cross-border contracts or international family law.

Law: Law is a system of rules that a society or government develops to regulate behavior, enforce justice, and provide order. It ensures that rights are protected and obligations are fulfilled, underpinned by penalties for violations.

1. Criminal Law: Criminal law deals with offenses against the state or society. It defines conduct that is considered harmful to society and prescribes punishment for those found guilty. This includes crimes such as theft, assault, and murder.
1. Example: Murder is a crime defined and punishable under criminal law.
2. Civil Law: Civil law governs disputes between private individuals or organizations. It includes areas like contracts, property, and family law. Civil law seeks remedies such as compensation rather than punishment.
2. Example: A lawsuit between two parties over a breached contract falls under civil law.
3. Constitutional Law: Constitutional law defines the structure of the state and the rights of individuals against the state. It establishes the framework within which government operates, outlining powers and limits.
3. Example: In the U.S., the Constitution guarantees freedom of speech under constitutional law.
4. Administrative Law: This area of law governs the activities of governmental agencies. It involves the rules and regulations these bodies create and the legal principles controlling their operations.
4. Example: A decision by a government agency regarding environmental regulations would be addressed through administrative law.

5. International Law:International law includes rules and norms that govern the relations between nations and international organizations. This encompasses public international law [as defined above] and private international law.
5. Example: Treaties on climate change or trade agreements fall under international law.
6. Equity Law:Equity law supplements common law, providing remedies when strict legal rules would result in unjust outcomes. It involves principles like fairness, justice, and conscience.
6. Example: Granting an injunction to prevent a party from breaching a contract is an equitable remedy.
7. Tort Law:Tort law provides relief to individuals harmed by the wrongful acts of others. It covers civil wrongs not arising from contracts, such as negligence, defamation, and nuisance.
7. Example: A person injured in a car accident due to another driver's negligence can seek compensation through tort law.

Organs of the State:

The three main organs of the state are the Legislature, Executive, and Judiciary. Each plays a distinct role in governance.

1. Legislature:

- Power: The Legislature is responsible for making laws. It is usually a parliament or congress that drafts, debates, and passes legislation. It also controls government spending and can scrutinize the actions of the executive.
- Functions:
 - Lawmaking: Enacting and amending laws.
 - Representation: Legislators represent the interests of the public.
 - Oversight: Monitoring and reviewing the actions of the executive branch.
- Example: The U.S. Congress and the UK Parliament are examples of legislatures.

2. Executive:

- Power: The Executive enforces and administers the laws made by the Legislature. It is led by the head of state [President, Prime Minister] and includes government ministers and public officials. The executive also formulates policies and manages public services.
- Functions:
 - Law enforcement: Executing laws and ensuring they are followed.
 - Policy formulation: Crafting and implementing government policy.
 - Defense and diplomacy: Managing the state's military and foreign relations.
- Example: The U.S. President and the UK Prime Minister lead the executive branch.

3. Judiciary:

- Power: The Judiciary interprets and applies the law. It is the system of courts that resolves disputes, punishes criminals, and safeguards individual rights. It ensures laws are consistent with the constitution and that justice is served impartially.
- Functions:
 - Dispute resolution: Settling civil and criminal cases.
 - Judicial review: Checking whether laws and actions of the executive are constitutional.
 - Protection of rights: Ensuring that fundamental rights are upheld.
- Example: The U.S. Supreme Court and the UK Supreme Court are examples of judicial bodies.

Cycle of Judicial Functions

Each of these organs operates independently to maintain a balance of power, prevent the abuse of authority, and ensure effective governance.
